

Film Department: Curriculum Overview 2023-24

Curriculum Intent:

Film Studies allows those passionate about cinema and the cinematic storytelling to immerse themselves into a wider discussion not made available by the average blockbuster or multiplex. Within Film Studies, films are analysed as an art form and method of expression across a number of different contexts spanning both geography and history. Across this course of study, learners will become accustomed to discussing how films convey meaning through the key elements of film form, how they construct aesthetics and representations of reality, and the wider contexts that each film was shaped by. When broken down into modules, learners will also develop ability with a number of further conversations including the varied inferences of the spectator, influences of auteurs, construction of narrative elements, critical debates surrounding the practise of filmmaking, ideological impacts, and filmmaker theories.

The Film course is heavily exam-based, and 70% of the qualification is made up of two exam papers, each of which provides a number of questions to be chosen and responded to by the learner. The remaining 30%, the coursework, is designed to assist students in building their portfolios as practitioners of film through either a script or short film. Due to these factors, it is the intent of the Film Department to develop students to become experts with film as an artform worthy of academic discussion, so that they can demonstrate such expertise in both their writing, as well as their contributions to the film medium.
